State Ethics Agency Names New Executive Director

The Fair Political Practices Commission, the independent state agency charged with investigating violations of campaign finance laws, today announced the appointment of Communications Director Roman Porter as the commission's new executive director.

"Roman Porter's thorough knowledge of California's Political Reform Act and his total commitment to its fair and impartial enforcement make him an ideal choice as executive director," said FPPC Chairman Ross Johnson.

Porter who served as the agency's communications director since April 2007 said, "I'm honored by the opportunity to help direct the efforts of so many dedicated employees as we strive to better serve the people of California."

Porter succeeds Michael Salerno who is returning to teach at UC Hastings College of the Law.
